claiming Hawk certificates
Posted by Litespeeds - 27 May 2010 13:40

I use to claim my Hawk certificates at The Tire Rack but I just ordered some Hawk pads from OG Racing and the price is very similar to Tire Rack but the beauty of it is no tax and free shipping for orders over $100.

The funny thing is OG Racing charges about $10 more for the front but $10 less for the rear than Tire Rack.

==

Re:claiming Hawk certificates
Posted by rlofgren - 06 Jun 2010 08:49

and then all the list prices would be the same. sales taxes and paying for shipping should then be the only variables...

==

Re:claiming Hawk certificates
Posted by Litespeeds - 06 Jun 2010 13:56

Apparently all list prices are not the same as each dealer sells them at different prices. I just got my Hawk brake pads in the other day. Guess I lucked out and contacted the right company. I bet you if you call each company listed on the certificate, each one will give you a different price. Some will charge tax if you are in the same state and also shipping and handling fees.

I figure that most larger companies will have a toll free number and their prices are usually better since they do higher volume and thus, might get a slightly cheaper wholesale price from the manufacturer which in turn, passes on to us, the customers.

Moral of the story is: If you are buying a pre-manufactured product, it is always best to check all the shops that sell them to see where you can save the most money. But then again, if money is not a factor, then you can roll the dice and choose from the list of vendors who will honor the certificate. My first contact was with The Tire Rack but since they didn't have the pads in stock, I called OG Racing.

==

Re:claiming Hawk certificates
Posted by JerryW - 09 Jun 2010 06:43

_____

Apex (one of our sponsors that give us a discount) also now is a Hawk dealer - They are not on the list for the certificates but may be able to support them. Contact Linda at Apex for details.

==