

Hanksville Window Net Mounting

Posted by genikz - 06 Feb 2010 02:49

Hey guys,

Can somebody with a Hanksville window net mounting kit provide a picture or two of their configuration?

I'm shopping around for different kits, and would like to support a friend of the series.

However, I don't want to bash my head on the mounting tabs or cylinders, so I was hoping somebody could post up some pictures or dimensions of their setup to make sure it's going to work for me. (I don't have a Hanksville cage)

Much appreciated!

Re:Hanksville Window Net Mounting

Posted by GaryM05 - 20 Feb 2010 23:52

Hanksville Hot Rods wrote:

...

Gary, I'd be happy to update your lower rod at no charge. Feel free to let me know if you'd like to schedule this. It won't take long.

...

Cool - thanks! I'll let you know.

=====

Re:Hanksville Window Net Mounting

Posted by genikz - 23 Feb 2010 09:50

Thanks for the detailed responses, fellas.

Hank: how long is the upper rod? Specifically, what is the distance between the two mounting points? Is it adjustable, or would I just cut it to size? I just want to be upper rod will work with my setup.

Thanks!

Chris

=====

Re:Hanksville Window Net Mounting

Posted by Hanksville Hot Rods - 23 Feb 2010 12:46

genikz wrote:

Thanks for the detailed responses, fellas.

Hank: how long is the upper rod? Specifically, what is the distance between the two mounting points? Is it adjustable, or would I just cut it to size? I just want to be upper rod will work with my setup.

Thanks!

Chris

Hi, Chris. Since the spring is inside the upper rod, it cannot be cut short and is not adjustable. The upper rod is available in two lengths - 22" or 26.5". The 22" long version fits the best on the 944s. The mounting tabs attach approx. .5" from the ends, so plan on the tabs to be approx. 21" and 25.5" apart depending on the rod length you choose.

If you are just looking for the upper rod, you can find these at most of the racing parts websites. My "value-add", so to speak, is my custom-fitted lower rod which might not be of value to you since I'm not familiar with your cage's door bars.

Hank

Re:Hanksville Window Net Mounting

Posted by genikz - 24 Feb 2010 09:32

Thanks, Hank. I'll do some measurements this weekend and I may be calling. I'll look at your door bars and compare them to mine. They can't be that much different.

Cheers,

Chris
